WASHINGTON - Texting while driving increased 50 percent last year, and 2 out of 10 drivers say they've sent text messages or emails while behind the wheel despite a rush by states to ban the practice, the National Traffic Safety Administration said recently.

An annual study conducted by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration of drivers observed at selected stoplights and intersections found that at any given time just under 1 percent were texting or manipulating hand-held devices, such as using a Web-capable smart phone or cell phone to view travel directions, check e-mails or calendar appointments, or surf the Internet, manual dialing, playing hand-held games, and holding phones in front of their faces. But the activity increased to .9 percent of drivers, up from .6 percent the previous year.

Texting while driving has increased by 50 percent causing over 500,000 injuries and more than 6,000 deaths annually!

Help promote safe driving habits by getting the message across to other drivers!
